Read the passage carefully and answer the questions based on it

The Indian government has recently instructed states to take strict action against outdoor advertisements promoting online casino and sports betting platforms. This move comes after authorities observed that several betting platforms were using hoardings, banners, and vehicle branding to promote their websites and apps. Such advertisements have been found to be misleading and potentially violating consumer protection laws, as well as encouraging an illegal vice in most parts of the country.

Betting and gambling, including online casinos and sports betting, pose significant financial and socio-economic risks, particularly for young individuals. The government has also objected to certain online platforms that promoted sports betting by launching campaigns that encouraged users to engage in live match viewing exclusively on their websites, which could violate copyright regulations.

Online casino and sports betting refer to gambling activities where individuals wager money on casino-style games like roulette, blackjack, and poker, or place bets on the outcome of sports events. These platforms typically operate through mobile apps and websites, allowing users to bet in real-time. Although online betting is legal in some countries, it remains restricted or outright banned in many regions, including most parts of India. The distinction between gaming and gambling in legal terms depends on the role of skill versus chance. If an activity relies purely on chance, it is considered gambling, whereas if it involves skill, it may be categorized as gaming. Sports betting, despite some strategic elements, is primarily based on chance, making it fall under the category of gambling.
