SIGN(S) OF THE TIMES

Visual thinking and aesthetics of Digital Subjectivity: from Ejzenštejn to Artificial Intelligence.

ABSTRACT

Experts, scholars, researchers and entrepreneurs of digital technology seem to agree: the promise of the "singularity" by Ray Kurzweil, the advent of machines smarter than humans, is being maintained. From the grafting of non-linear logics into the quantum computer to the creation of sensors more and more able to recreate the sensory experience, from the smart objects united in the Internet of Things to the "automatic" self-narration of big data, from the ever smaller and more powerful neuromorphic chips to the gigantic memories of the supercomputers, everything seems to turn towards a future where the hybridization between man and machine seems inevitable, and where the Artificial Intelligence will have equal dignity, rights and duties of the human's.

But on closer inspection, hybridization has already taken place: most of humanity lives "online", perennially connected, and filters its experiences in the optical, acoustic and tactile relationship with the screen-interface of a smartphone. On this screen, human life is transformed into the Human Computer Interface (HCI), the result of a continuous exchange between Human Factor and Artificial Intelligence in the portable interface: a Subjectivity that expresses itself above all through images, whose social, cognitive and aesthetics over a decade have changed the sense and the perception of history, economy and politics, ferrying them from the postmodern to the post-historical era of digital simultaneity. An era in which the "visual thought", the pre-linguistic and emotional part of the mind, took the upper hand on linguistic, logical and rational communication, investing the sense and the idea of art as a cyclone.

The HCI subjectivity lives happily the condition of post-art, immersed in apps, tools and websites that flood it with opportunities to engage in a dialectic between "templates", ready-made models, and their possible "customizations", providing the tools to take possession of every artistic model (music, photography, video, writing, etc.) and to personalize it, even without knowing anything about the basic grammars of the single art or of the computer programming that "remedies" in the devices. The aesthetics of the "users", more and more expert than the instinctive grammar of recycling called "mash-up", is in continuous development, even if for the most part it produces "memes" and copies, more than works. What happens to art and "critical" visual thinking in a world where artists no longer hold the monopoly of creativity, and where "user generated" contents, those of simple users, are at the center of the Web-Social Media market system? Crossing in a trans-disciplinary approach theory of mind, neuroscience, aesthetics and cybernetics, "SIGN (S) OF THE TIMES" answers the many open questions about the future of visual art and visual thought in the "new world" of HCI Subjectivity and union between Human and Artificial Intelligence, operating a vast recognition of the new artists-programmers-designers that in the individual areas of digitals (Interactive, Virtual Reality, Augmented Reality, Mixed Reality, Infoporn, Generative, Computational Imaging, Machine Learning) are revolutionizing the boundaries of the human experience of Reality and Virtuality and their aesthetic intertwining. From Aaron Koblin to Scott Snibbe, from Matt Pyke to Dmitry Morozov and Rafael Lozano-Hemmer, paths, works and projects of a digital art caught in its exciting moment of development, and in its relationship with great artistic personalities from the world of music and visual arts.

THEY SAY ABOUT THE BOOK:

Siamo chiamati ad attraversare i territori del digitale con un pensiero critico. Siamo chiamati a penetrare i recessi del lavoro informatico per fare luce sul pensiero e sul linguaggio del nostro tempo. E il libro di Serafino Murri lo fa provando a tracciare una traiettoria che parte dalla filosofia e raggiunge l'arte e l'estetica. Un viaggio ricco di storie, di testi, di riflessioni e di riferimenti. Un saggio che apre prospettive, che connette pensieri, che penetra nei meandri della tecnologia per fare luce sui significati, sui concetti, sulle simbologie, sulle tematiche del nostro tempo. Un libro che quindi non avrà difficoltà a trovare un proprio lettore.

We are called to cover the territories of the Digital with a critical thought. We are called to insight the stashes of informatics work to shed some light on the thinking and the language of our time. And the book by Serafino Murri does it in trying to trace a trajectory starting from philosophy and reaching art and aesthetics. A journey with many stories, texts, reflections and references. An essay that open to perspectives, connecting thoughts, enters in the intricacies of technology to uncover meanings, concepts, symbologies and issues of our time. A book that shall not have any difficulty in finding its readers.
