

We provide this assessment as a tool to help you take a quick snapshot about areas where your leaders and organization might have opportunities to improve when it comes to executing effectively. Getting things done in the organization and particularly a leaders ability to get things done effectively is a critical factor in the overall success of the enterprise.

Rate how well you agree with each statement below:	Yes	Somewhat	No
When we have issues with execution, usually quality is what suffers.
When we have issues with execution, usually time is what suffers.
When we have issues with execution, usually budget is what suffers.
We have difficulties working across units or departments to get things done efficiently and effectively.
There is significant variability among our leaders in their ability to execute on time, on budget, and with high quality.
There is significant variability among our leaders in their ability to influence others in the organization in order to achieve their goals.
There is significant variability among our leaders in their ability to see the political landscape for getting ideas moving forward, accepted, and implemented.
We could be stronger as an organization at coming up with new ideas and innovating.
We could be stronger as an organization at getting new ideas accepted.
We could be stronger as an organization at implementing new ideas once they are accepted.
We could be stronger as an organization ongoing operational excellence – the day to day operations.
We could be stronger as an organization at reacting to surprises and the unexpected.			